CHALLENGE

The 61st National Convention will by no means be a typical Convention. There is much business that must be brought before the Brothers assembled. It is absolutely vital that Alpha Chi Rho take new though firm steps to improve the Fraternity in the face of current challenges.

The most general challenge the Fraternity faces is one confronted by the entire fraternity system — a challenge to its very existence as a system. We cannot avoid our critics, we must face them. In that process we shall find the criticisms that are valid, and see if they can be constructively combatted. These must be differentiated from the unfounded criticism directed at fraternities by the misinformed. They too must be combatted.

But even beyond this problem rests a more specific challenge to fraternities, which urges us to a self-evaluation. We must define what the active role of the National Fraternity is, and we must take definite steps to act effectively in that role. The Resident Chapters are in need of greater assistance from the Fraternity. At the 1963 Convention an effort must be made to define their needs and find a way to assist them.

The potential of the Fraternity in terms of size presents a provoking challenge toward expansion of the Fraternity. Alpha Chi Rho must find a way to reach more college undergraduates in the future, to make fraternity a meaningful aspect of the life of the student of tomorrow. In this Convention it is hoped we will mobilize the Brotherhood in a thorough and well delineated program to expand the Fraternity to other campuses, and to revitalize Chapters now inactive. The 1963 Convention stands as a particular invitation to graduate Brothers of Chapters no longer active on a resident level. "We will return!"

Inherent in each decision of the National Fraternity committing it to vigorous action is the challenge of the ways and means of accomplishment. The Fraternity needs a more active force of Brothers to carry out and support the programs necessary to the growth and development of the Fraternity. The Fraternity also needs to be in a stronger financial position to meet the expenses of greater service. The 1963 Convention must find a resolution to this problem of financial support for the Fraternity.

Hand in hand with the problem of the resources of the Fraternity is the challenge of personnel for the many projects the Fraternity must conduct. The greatest source of personnel is among the graduate Brothers themselves. The experienced men who have graduated as Alpha Chi Rhos in years past can be of tremendous assistance in meeting the challenges that face both the Fraternity as a whole and the individual Chapters. The 1963 Convention promises not only to bring the Brothers together for deliberation, but to mobilize all the Brothers, graduates and undergraduates alike, toward effective and organized action.

You will notice from the schedule of the Training School the extent of the program which the undergraduates will cover before coming to the Convention sessions. They will be searching for answers to these same challenges, and will profit from the opportunity of gaining a wider perspective, while at the same time the entire Fraternity will gain from the constructive results of their efforts. The undergraduates are desirous of a Convention of accomplishment. At the 1963 Convention they want to learn something about their National and about their graduates. They also want to participate in analyzing these challenges and making decisions, and then in implementing these decisions in the face of the challenge.

We invite all Brothers, even if they are not delegates to the Convention, to come early and attend the Training School. The greatest service the Fraternity can impart is to the undergraduates; graduate interest is based on assisting the Resident Chapters. At the 1963 Convention the entire Fraternity wants the undergraduates to come and take an active part in the affairs of their National Fraternity.

To the graduates of the Fraternity, your Convention Committee wishes to express its particular desire and interest that you should attend this crucial Convention. Your mature outlook, your diverse experience, your insight into the lasting values of fraternity, your capacity for accomplishment in the world, qualifies you in a special way to take part in an active way in the deliberation and activity that will arise in the Sixty-first National Convention of the Fraternity.
